Folk Musician • Voice • Fiddle • Guitar

Stewart plays fiddle and guitar, and sings traditional songs from the British Isles and America. He plays in Irish sessions and performs at open mics and other venues including Northwest Folklife Festival. He studied voice at Pomona College and the University of Illinois while majoring in Chemistry. He taught Chemistry at St. Olaf College (MN) for 28 years and was research professor at the University of Washington before retiring to become a full-time folk musician. He studied classical violin, but gave it up in high school for guitar and singing. He was active in the Northfield (MN) Arts Guild, singing lead roles in summer musicals and opera workshops. After moving to Washington he picked up the violin again to become a fiddler. With Victory Music he helped set up open mics and an acoustic music venue in north Seattle, and wrote a monthly column, "Musical Traditions," for the Victory Review. From 2006-2010 he produced a concert series for the Haller Lake Arts Council. In 2007 he helped revive the 55-year-old Pacific NW Folklore Society. He has produced four CDs: "Paddy Graber – The Craic Was Great" (2004), songs by an Irish traditional singer and story teller from Vancouver, B. C.; "Songs of the Pacific Northwest" (2005), original and traditional songs of the Pacific NW sung by various regional musicians; and two of his own CDs.
