The first part of the Auld Swaara is the rocking of the waves, followed by the sinking of the body, the last part is where the drowned fisherman's soul rises to Valhalla.

"Dis een is a lament fir fishermen wha were lost at sea ida time o' da Haaf fishing. Naebody ida auld days laeked to caa a dead body be dere name. Day wir aye spoken aboot as "her it belanged ta me", or "da bairn's faider". Ivery fisherman at dat time wore next til his skin a heavy knitted singlet caaed a jupie usually made oot o' 3 ply black wirsit. Dis wis eferred to as da swaara, or dark jupie, so da name really means da auld swaara jupie. I go dis tün fae da late Peter Fraser, wha telt me dat his grandfaider aye said da tün was composed in deep sorrow, and da story o' da jupie fae my faider."
